

Commuting students at the University of South Carolina struggle to find open parking spots on campus after 10:00a. After 10:00a, students fill most, if not all, of the available parking in certain areas, making the search for an open parking space difficult. If commuting students were able to know that a particular area was full before arriving on campus, they could know not to search that area for a spot.